······ Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union.

P. A. CHEATRAM, Editors. A. F. CALVERT.

Cutting acreage and holding cotton reminds me of something else.

Do you know of any farmer in South Carolina that is holding a fine beef steer, pig, or a fine pair of mules, or good pair of coach horses, a ton of bay or a bushel of grain, or a lot of good fat hens and frying chickens, a lot of iresh eggs and butter, that is now waiting on some live stock, or grain and hay association, or deirymen's association, or hen society to meet and pass resolutions to hold these South Carolina farm products for profitable prices? No! None of these kind of farmers are waiting for profitable prices for these products, but on the other hand buyers are going all over the country looking for these farm products and are paying fine prices. The producers of this kind of South Carolina farm products are not holding and hunting for buyers but the opposite condition is here. The buyers are on hint all the while for this stuff, and this is no new condition of things in South Carolina. Is it not strange that all animals, even gluttonbeasts, learn to know when they get enough of a thing? But, some how or other, some of our silly all-cotton farmers seem never to know when they have got enough cotton. The more home supplies one has adout him the easier it is to hold cotton. You cannut starve a cook any more than you can starve out a farmer that raises all these home supplies.

This kind of South Caralina farmer can plies.
This kind of South Caralina farmer can hold on to his cotton until his clothes are worn into holes and the tax man comes.

South Carolina State Farmers Union to Organize.

At the meeting of the Executive Committee of the South Carolina Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union in council with Anderson County Union on the 13th, it was agreed to organize a State Union at Anderson, S. C., beginning on May 31st, and continue the meeting until the work is finished.

continue the meeting until the work is finished.

Messrs. B. F. Earle, State organizer, Anderson, Professor Mahasiley, of Williamston, and Hon. O. P. Goodwin, of Laurens, Assistant State organizers, as well as several local organizers, are now in the field bringing the larmers together in the Union preparing for organizing the State Union.

If you know of a good farmer in your county that is as good an organizer or better than the three named above, just trot him out, we have a good job for him. Send his name in to either of the organizers. The Farmers' Uniou needs aboul 25 more good men to visit every county in the State.

Lebanon Farmers Union, Anderson Coun ty, saved to its members by loyal cc-opera-tion last year sixteen thousand dollars. This agreeable and highly commendable report was brought out at the last Anderson Coun. ty Farmers' Union.

Cedar Grove Union, of Anderson County, had a fine oyster supper and good speaking last Saturday night. That is right; you see it is good to leed unionism to the luner man now and then, and not try to crowd too much Unionism into the brain all the while.

When you first heard about the Farmers' Union coming your way you could not help thinking about all the bad things the Alliance had done, could you? But when you know more about the Farmers' Union, and get a peep on the inside of some real good lively Union, you will then know that the up-to-date Farmers' Union has learned a great big thing out of the mistakes the Alliance made.

Well, now, if you think we are not saying enough of the right things in these columns, and are saying too much on the wrong side of our arming interest, do drop us a little confidential note about it, so that we will know better next time.

Don't forget that the Farmers' Union is an educational affiair, and that we all should take learning from each other.

Some men can tell you about many bad things that the Alliance did, but if you ask them about the good things the Alliance did for farmers they seem to have been too busy looking after the bad things to find any good in the Alliance! Look dilligently for what you want and you generally find it!

Anderson, S. C., Mar. 14, 1906.

Mr. J. C. Stribling, Pendieton, S. C.

—The question of planting is now before the members of the Union, and the subject of reduction of cotton acreage has been sprung; and I believe every member is willing to do the right thing about the matter, but don't know what that is. Now it seems to me, that the only way to make a practical suggestion is that every man be his own judge in the premises based on this: Be sure to plant enough grain to make all you need, if a short crop is made. Now, the fellew who has to be? a bushel of corn is planting too much cotton, and is not itving up to the doctrine of the Union, and is not a good Union man let him be whom he may. So, brother, if you belong to that list and want the respect of your Union quit it right now, and take some of that land you meent to plant in cotton and put it in corn. You are the man that we want to reduce. You are not treating yourself nor your brothers right. We ought to put a stop to the shipment of corn to our country. We can do it and not get hurt, but the contrary be helpful to ourselves. This is the doctrine of the Oid Grange, which is one of the fundamental doctrines of the Farmers' Union. How and what to make was the mission of the Grange. To supply money to pay for it was the doctrine of the Alliance.

Hence the only new idea of the Union is how to get value received for our product. So I do hope that the spologists for the Grange and the Alliance will cease forever their songs of despair. I for one am convinced that there never has been grander successes than the two above named societies, making room for the Union. They lived to establish their principles in the hearts and minds of the people and stopped (and died some would asy.) They are not dead. No, by no means. How to make is still a live issue in its muitifudinous form—improved implements, improved stock of every description are all the doctrines of the Grange firmly engrafted in the minds of the people and the various demands of the Alliance are being
